dress generously about a week before seeding. Another light top-dressing is applied to cover the sod. It is important not to use too much topdressing then because a heavy dressing buries the small bent grass seed so deep that much of it does not become established.

Water management after seeding is extremely important especially when the weather is windy or hot. It is very important to keep the surface soil continuously moist, but not wet until the seedling grass becomes well established. This way requires light showering four to five times daily, seven days a week, for the first couple weeks. On a windy day, seedlings can wither and die in a matter of a couple of hours if the soil becomes dry. This has been the cause of grass failure in too many cases. Many supts. prefer to water by hand, using a rose nozzle, for the first couple of weeks, then changing to regular sprinklers after the seedling grass is off to a good start.
