buried without delay as a time and labor saving measure. In those three weeks 100,000 yards of fill was moved through the marsh portion of the course, four greens and six tees were molded, one mile of clubhouse road was roughed out, and the clubhouse area was cleared.

The specifications on this job read as follows: 175,000 yards of earth were moved with the Cat DW21 tractor-scraper combinations; 75,000 yards of earth were moved with bulldozers; 52,000 yards of loam were stripped and replaced; the moving of 30,000 yards of earth for the molding of the greens and tees was accomplished with Caterpillar D6 tractors. For irrigation installation, the following pipe was supplied: one mile of six-inch transite pipe; three miles of four-inch transite pipe; three miles of three-inch transite pipe, one mile of two-inch and one-inch galvanized pipe. Ten tons of Merion Bluegrass seed and 120,000 square feet of imported green sod were seeded or laid down and 60 tons of fertilizer were applied.

Supervision of the construction of New Seabury was handled by Sil Paulini of the Paulini & Vespa Bros. firm. He was assisted by Leo Bartolini, who handled the earthmoving operations, and Tony D'Innocenzo who was in charge of irrigation, greens, tees and traps. Henry Mitchell of the William F. Mitchell, Inc., Manchester, New Hampshire, golf course designer, assisted in all phases.

Emil Hanslin Associates, Inc. is the developer of Seabury. It not only includes the 36-hole course but many adjacent homes. An uninhabited area, impassable to humans or vehicles a year ago, Seabury has emerged as one of the beauty spots on Cape Cod.
