Expulsion Liability

Court said, "The effect of the exhibit is that appellant's conduct did, in the opinion of all 20 members of the Board of Governors, injure the welfare or character of the Club and they voted unanimously to expel him.

"There is no allegation that any different procedure was used in appellant's expulsion, none that it was not in strict compliance with the by-laws, and none challenging the validity of the by-laws."

Taking all these circumstances into consideration, the Supreme Court ruled in favor of the defendant club.

The Court then took up the action brought against the club's insurance carrier, which was predicated on the theory that because a member of the club's Board of Governors was the agent who sold the insurance to the club, he as agent of the insurance company had "conspired in the wrongful and malicious expulsion."

The Court declined to go along with this theory. It held that the insurance agent was acting in his individual capacity when he voted with his fellow members of the board of governors and not in his capacity as an agent of the insurance company, and that in this particular case, the expulsion was not wrongful. The trial court's ruling in favor of the insurance company defendant was also affirmed. (Waugman vs. Skyline CC, 172 So, 2nd 381.)
