MacGregor Company introduces an iron club with a Split Level sole. According to MacGregor, the iron, which actually has two soles, serves two functions. A thin leading sole helps the golfer cut through heavy or hard turf with less turf drag and less loss of clubhead speed. The second sole helps control the depth of the divot. Both MT and VIP irons are available with the Split Level feature.

Ram Golf Corp. offers an aluminum shaft model in its Doug Sanders line of golf clubs. The woods are walnut-color laminated heads with a two-piece wide angle face insert, held in place by epoxy cement plus three hidden screws. The irons have a tri-chrome finish which, according to Ram, will not lose its appearance even after several seasons of rugged use. The Sanders s/s model is topped off with black and gold rubber grips.
