Marker adjusts to user's arm length, sprays neat lines in fluorescent colors

The hand-operated Easy Marker is made of strong molded plastic and telescopes for storage or to adjust to the user's arm length (or the seat height, if used from a maintenance cart or truck). The user won't have to stoop or bend over to use the Easy Marker — just start walking and start marking. The manufacturer, Fox Valley Marking Systems Inc., offers Easy Marker paint in five bright fluorescent colors as well as regular white, blue, yellow, and aluminum. The cans are made to spray upside down and empty completely; they are guaranteed not to clog. One can will spray approximately 1100 linear feet. The paint comes in cases of a dozen 13-ounce cans each.

Parking lots can look like greens but hold up like concrete

Imagine a parking lot or a driveway or a whole network of cart paths that gives the load-bearing characteristics, durability, and level surface of concrete while providing the natural drainage, oxygen supply, and beauty of real grass. Your club can have that now with Grasscrete, available from Bomanite Corp. Essentially a reinforced concrete slab with geometrically placed holes in which grass can be planted, Grasscrete has been used in many installations in England over the past four years. The concrete protects the root structure of the grass, so it won't be damaged by traffic. Required maintenance consists of normal watering and mowing, though mowing is seldom required in areas with frequent traffic.

Pro finishes poorly due to his putting, then designs new putter to correct faults

A new putter, the "Duke," was designed by touring PGA pro Brian G. Shillington after finishing out of the money in cross-country tournament due primarily to faulty putting. To try to assure himself of more one-putt greens, Shillington devoted his spare time and money to developing a putter with characteristics that make uncanny sighting and good putting form automatic. The resulting putter incorporates a slot opening on its top with a cross-hair sight alignment below. The golfer looks down through the slot at this alignment device to line up the putter's head with the hole. The new design is supposed to be particularly accurate in holing putts from under nine feet. The Professional Touch Inc., distributor of the "Duke," claims the design compels the golfer to keep his eyes directly over the ball.

San Diego
Golf Academy

Present day golf course operation demands a versatile, well educated individual — one willing and able to work at or profitably manage the various business related operations of a golf complex.

The San Diego Golf Academy is in its second year of training outstanding persons in golf course management, operations and golf instruction.

The Academy has a two (2) year curriculum which includes every facet of the game of golf and its instruction — plus college level courses in business and management operations. Classes are devoted to: 1) Business Management, 2) Retailing, 3) Accounting, 4) Food and Beverage Controls, 5) Business Law, 6) Oral and Written Communication Skills, 7) Sports Theory, 8) Landscape and Golf Course Design, 9) Turf Maintenance and 10) Purchasing.

In addition, specialized instruction in 1) The Game of Golf, 2) Golf Teaching Techniques, 3) Individual Lessons, 4) Conducting Golf Activity and Tournaments, 5) Club Repair and Custom Fitting, and 6) Pro-Shop Operations are given each student.

These courses and instructional classes are devised to combine education and career training for the golf professionals, club operators and course managers of the future.

The practical experience gained by our well trained and educated Academy students will be of great value to golf course owners and operators throughout the U.S. If your golf course can utilize the talents of a San Diego Golf Academy graduate, contact:

Honeycomb zone weighting

The answer to efficient iron play. More weight in zones 1 and 2 is vital in keeping the ball straight and getting it up. Zone 1 counteracts the adverse "lever" effect when the ball is hit too near the toe. A heavier zone 2 makes the ball ride up the club face for a high rising shot.

The trim hosel in zone 3 and the ultra-thin wall of zone 4, kept rigid by the Honeycomb design, make this exclusive scientific weight management possible. Investment cast stainless. Your customers will love 'em. Order today: 213/537-6670.
