A Golfer's Bible

"A ball rolling or lying near a bunker or sand trap may be played if the player feels he is in need of practice. If a player elects to practice, no strokes other than the first one made in the bunker shall be counted against said player. Should the ball fail to emerge after the first stroke, the faulty design of the bunker is deemed amply demonstrated and the skill of the player should not be penalized for a defect in construction over which he has no control. . . ."

"A ball striking a tree while in flight shall be deemed not to have struck a tree unless the player making the stroke declares that it was deliberately aimed for. In this case, play shall cease momentarily while his partners congratulate him on his marksmanship. But if the player attests in good faith that it was in no sense his intention to strike the tree, then it is obviously a piece of bad luck that has no place in a scientific game. No penalty shall accrue to the player, who is therefore permitted to estimate the distance his ball would have traveled and to play the ball from that position. . . ."

"There is no such thing as a lost ball. The ball is somewhere on the course and will be picked up eventually and pocketed by someone other than the owner, thus becoming not a lost but a stolen ball. A player suffering a stolen ball shall be entitled to cries of sympathy from his fellow players who shall crowd around him, importuning him not to compound the felony by charging himself with the loss of stroke. Upon returning to the clubhouse, the player shall apply to the professional for restitution of the stolen article since that worthy official always has a large supply of golf balls on hand. . . ."

"A putted ball that rims the cup and stays out shall be deemed to have dropped, since the occurrence shall be contrary to the laws of gravitation which supercedes the laws of golf. The same rule shall be in force for balls that pass over the hole and stay out, since it is a well known fact that any object attempting to maintain its position in the atmosphere without something to support it, must drop!!!
