

Christmas Wishes

It is during the Christmas season that we find ourselves looking at those around us and recalling the special moments that we have shared. In this light, I would like to offer these Christmas wishes for you:

May you gain the confidence and wisdom needed to make difficult decisions in your life. May you have the courage to stand by these decisions in the face of controversy. As no one makes all the right choices, may you know when to change your mind, and have the understanding to accept the choices that others make.

May others treat you with respect and sincerity so that you maintain your faith in humankind, always seeking and finding the best in people.

May your relationships be based on love, genuine and pure, and the love you receive be proportionate to the love you extend to others.

In every life there are unpleasantries — pain, anguish, and hurt. May you have the power to weather these conditions, and to use them as a tool to enhance the joys and triumphs that you surely will experience.

May you stay true to your values, upholding the moral and ethical standards that you have set for yourself, both personally and professionally.

Above all, may you be true to yourself, examining issues with your heart, mind, and soul, to gain the insight needed to find real happiness.

In short, my friend, I wish you the very best that this life has to offer — in the coming year, and forever.

— F.N. Taylor III