

Bureau Outlines Water Issues

The Bureau of National Affairs, a Washington-based information agency devoted to governmental affairs, has outlined key water issues to watch for in 1993.

GCSAA has gone on record stating it thinks water issues will dominate much of the regulatory and legislative arena in the coming year.

The issues outlined in the BNA report are:

- Inclusion of clean water funding in an infrastructure investment bill. If so, the drive to reauthorize the Clean Water Act may be eliminated.

- Efforts to modify the state revolving loan fund program, either in the allocation formulas or in the amount of funds available through the program.

- The initiation of proceedings to withdraw several states' and one territory's authority over their drinking water programs.
