TREES ARE NATURE'S AIR CONDITIONERS

The cooling experience of a drive away from downtown is known to many, and pretty much taken for granted by all. The macadam, brick, and concrete of every downtown area makes each a hot, hot place in summer. But why? There's macadam, brick, and concrete in the suburbs, too.

The answer of course is trees. Tree lined streets and tree shaded yards make the difference. Trees not only shade us from the hot sun's rays, trees also air condition the heat and make it cooler. In fact, the average suburbanite can expect heat reduction up to 20% in those areas where trees have grown to mature size.

ARE THERE ENOUGH TREES IN YOUR NEIGHBORHOOD?

It takes approximately twenty mature trees to clean the air of carbon dioxide resulting from every auto or truck consuming five gallons of gasoline. About twenty more trees are needed to remove the carbon dioxide produced by the average home oil burner. And most important, it takes at least one mature tree to remove the carbon dioxide exhaled daily by each living person.

The total number of trees required per person per day to remove our civilization's current carbon dioxide production is estimated to be seventy-eight trees. That's 312 trees for every average American family of four.
