

Musser Tournament Set for October 15

The 7th Annual Musser Tournament, sponsored by the Maryland Turfgrass Council and the MAAGCS, will be held Tuesday, October 15, at the Country Club of Maryland, with a 1 p.m. shotgun start. The entry fee of $250 per four-man team covers green and cart fees, individual and team (two net best-balls of foursome) prizes, plus longest drive and closest to the pin awards, and dinner (at 6:30 p.m.).

The Musser International Turfgrass Foundation, of which Dr. Fred V. Grau has been president since 1969, is a tax-exempt, nonprofit, charitable, and educational organization that provides grants for needed research in any part of the turfgrass industry and furnishes help to graduate students at turfgrass-oriented institutions in order to provide well-trained professionals as future leaders in the industry.

Mid-Year Conference To Aid Assistants

A new training seminar designed especially for experienced assistant golf course superintendents and young golf course employees who are potential assistants will be offered at the GCSAA first Mid-Year Turfgrass Conference and Show September 19-24 at the Indiana Convention Center in Indianapolis.

The seminar, entitled, "The Assistant Superintendent: Functions and Responsibilities," will be taught by Mary T. Rau and Bruce R. Williams and will address such management concerns as delegating tasks, motivating employees, handling problem situations, making decisions, and managing time. The one-day seminar begins at 8 a.m. Friday, September 20, and all new members who join GCSAA before August 19 will receive free admission to it as well as to the entire Conference.

Bruce Williams, superintendent at Bob O'Link Golf Club in Highland Park, Ill., regards the seminar as a rare opportunity for assistants to meet as a group and discuss ideas, pointing out that as the superintendents of the future, they are the lifeblood of the association.

The Finger Points Again

Something a bit disturbing happened in big-time golf in August. After a good year of widespread public appreciation of the golf course superintendent and his job, with every tournament winner on the Tour thanking the superintendent on TV for getting the course in such terrific shape, suddenly a superintendent found himself taking a lot of heat. The tournament was the PGA, the course was Denver's Cherry Hills, and the superintendent getting the bad press was Armen Suny.

The first murmurs of unhappiness with the condition of the course began on Saturday, the third day of the tournament, when the greens to all intents and purposes stopped holding the ball. Shots would hit the putting surface and just take off. Short putts that missed the center of the cup would lip out and run 5 feet past. On some of the more sharply sloping greens, a long putt was an invitation to take two (or three) more. The pros began to complain, on the course and in the press tent. In stories coming out of Denver after the last round in which Hubie Green emerged as the winner, two shots in front of Lee Trevino, Lee and other players were not hesitant to speak their minds to the writers. Steve Hershey in USA TODAY quoted Lee as saying, "I hit six good shots to greens, and they all bounced over the back. There is no way they could have gotten that hard in one night unless they rolled them." Fuzzy Zoeller, generally regarded as a good-natured sort, said, "I've never seen such a difference in the condition of the greens. One day they were soft and holding and the next day they were like a parking lot."

With these verbal attacks reverberating around the club, Superintendent Suny called a news conference at which he said that he had indeed rolled the greens, not to harden but to smooth them. Dick Taylor, writing in GOLF WORLD, accused Suny of being overprotective of his golf course after Thursday's low scores. Taylor's view was that Suny took it personally and proceeded on Saturday morning to double-cut the greens and roll them with a 60-pound roller. He also decided not to water them, and when strong winds came up Saturday to dry them out even more, the greens would no longer hold an iron shot. Taylor went on to describe the writers at Suny's press conference as "stunned at his belligerence" and "flabbergasted when the man said, 'they (the pros) finally realized where they were, in the third round of a major (championship).'" For the moment, at least, the honeymoon between superintendent, players, and press seemed to be over.

What does all this mean to a country club or public golf course superintendent in Maryland or Virginia who may have to prep his course once in every few years for a local association championship or, more often, for a pro-am? Obviously, not very much. But, more than one superintendent has taken the rap for a green committee chairman who wanted the course toughened up for a local event, with disastrous consequences for players and course. And how about a situation in which a committeeman wants the greens or fairways cut shorter than they should be, considering the humidity and temperature? Where does the blame go when the greens turn purple, then brown? Such things have happened in these parts and could happen again. The point being made, and it applies to Cherry Hills as well as to Valley Muni, is that there must be two-way communication between the superintendent and club or tournament officials to avoid situations like the one that developed at the PGA. That episode may be reverberating for a long time, to no one's credit. — C.C.
