Stihl 044: carburetor is heated

Shindaiwa 577: advanced filter

McCulloch 5700: for serious cutters

These are two machines at the opposite ends of the professional spectrum. If—more likely—you want something in between, you'll be surprised how many different kinds of features are available.

For instance, Stihl's 023L is called "the world's quietest gasoline-powered chain saw" because its noise level is just 92dBa at the operator's ear. Standing at someone using an electric typewriter, the company says, is like standing 33 feet from someone running an 023L.

Because such a wide range of features is available, the commercial chain saw user can also choose the protection and the power needed in extremely dusty conditions. And Shindaiwa's 577 and 488 offer advanced filtration options (the Power Pro Air Filter) for just that kind of use.

Here, then, are some of the sizes and styles of chain saws for the professional user. This month, we've included phone numbers in the company listings to make it even faster to receive information on the product.
