With their built-in ability to handle heavy loads and adverse weather and ground conditions, compact tractors can use their maneuverability to provide excellent grass cutting performance, from the finest finishing cuts to thick, heavy weed cutting.

Additionally, these tractors offer

the following benefits:

 ample drawbar pull and traction to operate high-capacity grass clippings collectors; built-in strength, weight and rigidity for excellent mowing performance on rolling, damp or soft ground:

• and when versatility is a key criteria, a single compact tractor can serve as the power unit for both heavy-duty mowers and fine-cut finishing mowers.

Modern mower design recognizes the need for versatility. For example, One tractor can be constantly ready for high-capacity mowing and diverse loading, grading and lifting applications.

front-end loaders and mid-mount mowers are designed to be mounted simultaneously. One tractor can be constantly ready for high-capacity mowing and diverse loading, grading and lifting applications.

Snow removal is a fact of life for landscape supervisors in much of North America. This is one operation in which the power, durability and ability to be unaffected by harsh conditions make compact tractors an outstanding value. Workers' productivity can be increased and exposure to harsh weather decreased by using compact tractors to provide faster, more efficient snow removal. Compact tractors equipped with long-lasting, ruggedly constructed, frontmounted blades quickly remove snow from streets and parking lots. They have the reserve horsepower and hydraulic capacity to operate rotary brooms for clean-sweep snow removal from sidewalks and pedestrian plazas. They are also designed with demanding PTO applications in mind such as snow thrower operations to remove deep, heavy snowfalls or to clear the way for future snow plowing or sweeping.

Multiple transmission gear selections further enhance PTO operation by providing slow travel speeds at full horsepower engine RPMs. And inexpensive weather brakes direct engine heat toward the operator or fully enclosed cabs increase operator comfort and productivity in the coldest weather.

In many turf care operations, compact tractors can be a very productive and economical capital investment. In larger fleets, they can extend the versatility of utility tractors to more workers, in a machine size that is economical to purchase and operate. For other operations, they bring the power and versatility of utility tractors to situations that do not require the power and size of a mid-sized utility tractor.

SO DEM

Seed harvests are up fr demand will keep sup existent, by Jeff Sobul, and o use Frank Sinatra's words: it was a very good year.

The grass seed harvest of 1988 will be remembered as one in which everything went like clockwork—a bit late, but nonetheless like clockwork. Almost all yields were higher than 1987, especially those of perennial ryegrass.

"We're expecting to have enough seed to meet early-anticipated demand," says Kent Wiley of Pickseed West—emphasis on "early."

Which means that, if you're reading this report now and are still thinking about buying seed, you might have to leave it at just thinking. Because there probably won't be any seed to buy.

The green industry is just too demanding. "We're going to have our biggest year ever," says Tom Stanley of Turf Seed, "but it's still not going to meet demand."

Notes Wiley: "There is increased cleaning capacity and new warehousing in the valley as seed growers respond to increasing customer needs." Pickseed itself has increased its facility by 10,000 sq. ft. and added a new loading area. Also, new processing equipment from Germany is boosting Jacklin Seed's already massive and efficient facility.

"The demand for bluegrass is up tremendously," notes a befuddled Gayle Jacklin-Ward of Jacklin Seed, the largest marketer of bluegrasses in the world, "I don't know where it's going."

world. "I don't know where it's going."
"It's been a fairly good harvest," says Rich Underwood of International Seeds, "but it won't be able to take care of the demand. We expect a basic tightness on most

Despite a good harvest, distributors anticipate having trouble meeting demand this year. As a result, 10 to 15 percent price increases are expected.

turfgrasses, with higher prices."

A number of factors continue to drive up demand for grass seed, both proprietary and common. The one that's been in the news everywhere is of course, the Great Drought of 1988, which hit the grass-rich Midwest especially hard.

Lawn care operators may have been hit hard from the drought during the summer, but many of them will make up lost business through lawn renovations this fall (or next spring, if the seed isn't available yet). This should account for added pressure for blues, ryes and tall fescues, among others.

All-purpose turf

Especially tall fescues. Their drought tolerant reputation has boosted popularity greatly. Tall fescue demand is also up, say several sources, because it is adapting well to climates further north than ever before. As far north as Canada, in some cases. Use is even spreading to golf course roughs in some locations, notes Pickseed's Wiley.

According to Steve Tubbs of Turf Merchants, demand for the perennial ryes has increased as well, so the seed growers have responded by planting upwards of 90,000 acres of it, compared with 50,000 acres just two years ago.

"There are some good yields of perennial ryegrasses," Wiley adds. "Overall, they're up 10 to 15 percent." Pickseed added improved varieties of three popular ryegrasses to help meet the demand this year: Fiesta II, Blazer II and Dasher II.

Bluegrasses

Kenny Rogers' gambler just wants to break even "when the day is done." Seed growers and marketers are gamblers, and it seems that the bluegrass gamblers broke even this year.

A bluegrass surplus will ease one of the growning concerns in the industry: lack of land. Growers were eating up large tracts of farmland at a swift pace to meet demand.

Turf Merchants' Tubbs adds, "Our stuff is doing just phenomenal this year. We've had 2,500 to 2,600 pounds per acre yield of Gnome when the average is about 1,200 pounds per acre."

However, common varieties did poorly this year, down 30 percent despite increased acres, Jacklin-Ward says. Pickseed's Wiley is even less optimistic. "Some estimates are one-half of last year," he says.

What's a surplus?

There is good news, though. Many of the marketers are predicting a surplus soon, perhaps next year. Jacklin-Ward is one. After a number of years of completely sold out bluegrasses, she sees a surplus for 1989 (if the weather holds, of course). "I anticipate next year we'll have to learn how to sell again," she says happily. In recent years the company has had to turn away prospective customers because there wasn't anything to sell them.

Some new varieties expected to hit the market this year: Providence bentgrass, Alpine bluegrass, Bonsai dwarf turf-type tall fescue and Cobra bentgrass.

Turf Seed's Stanley is anticipating a surplus in "one to two years." Mike Robinson of Seed Research is even predicting a surplus of bluegrasses this year "because there's more interest in turf-type tall fescues and ryegrasses."

Whenever it happens, a bluegrass surplus will ease one of the growing concerns in the industry: lack of land. Growers were eating up large tracts of farmland at a swift pace to boost yield amounts to meet demand.

"We're starting to run out of this big bank of acreage," Wiley explains. "It's gotten much tougher now. The northern end of the Willamette Valley (where most of the ryes and tall fescues are grown) is competing with the grain markets for acreage. It'll be hard to get acreages of turfgrass because of the (higher) prices of wheat."

Farmers, who are businessmen, too, see more profits in growing the higher priced wheat. Consequently, there is less room for grass. Similar problems exist in the bluegrass belt of Idaho and Washington, Jacklin-Ward confirmed.

New wave

This reduced acreage availability hasn't stemmed the tide of new varieties. In addition to Pickseed's ryes, a plethora of new varieties were expected to hit the market this year, including Providence bentgrass (formerly SR 1019) from Seed Research, Alpine bluegrass from Pickseed West, Bonsai dwarf turf-type tall fescue from Turf Merchants and Cobra bentgrass from International Seeds. Turf Seed is planning on releasing a Silverado-Eldorado-Monarch blend in 1989—the first dwarf turf-type tall fescue blend ever.
