Landscape software updated by creator

An updated version of the 1.91 Landscape Plant Manager computer software program has been released by its creator, Robert W. Bouffard, a landscape and grounds management instructor at Ohio State University.

The program was developed for the management of landscape plant information for use by students, homeowners, and landscapers. Information about plants is divided into fields of information such as scientific name, common name and design criteria.

With up to 24 design criteria such as seasonal leaf color, height, growth rate, bloom colors, etc., the user can select plants that are aesthetically pleasing and meet design criteria.

The program is designed to work with IBM PC series or any true compatible computer. It has the capacity for 2,000 or more entries of plant records.

"This program offers a much quicker way to research plants for landscape designers. It replaces hours of browsing through catalogs and gives the user a chance to design using very specific design criteria," says Bouffard.
