Historical Note

The first course in veterinary medicine was taught at Michigan Agricultural College (now Michigan State University) in 1884, although the Veterinary Division was not officially authorized until 1909. In 1910, the Division became the Veterinary Science/Veterinary Medicine Division, and from 1944 to 1955, it was the School of Veterinary Medicine. It became the Veterinary Medicine College in 1956, the same year in which its administrative responsibility was shifted from the President to the Provost/Vice President for Academic Affairs.

Scope and Contents

The records of the College of Veterinary Medicine consist of materials related to academic programs, publications, and annual reports. The College Administrative Documents series includes information related to budgets, accreditation, faculty interests, mission statements, and Dean's reports. Note that the two of the ledgers date from 1900 and earlier. Record books of cases are also included. Audio/visual materials include a class of 1960 photograph, a slide of a oath ceremony, and several 16mm films. Electronic Resources includes a "Zombie Apocalypse" video, that was used as part of a college organized team building and leadership program in 2013.

Scope and Contents

This is a video presenting a fictional zombie apocalypse scenario. The description provided of the film is as follows: "On January 11, 2013, students and faculty of the Michigan State College of Veterinary Medicine faced a Zombie Apocalypse. They were challenged, through a series of puzzles and tasks, to save the animals of MSU's Veterinary Teaching Hospital, and themselves." The video introduces the scenario but does not cover the "puzzles and tasks".

This was a new spin on an annual team building and leadership program run by the college.
