Historical Note

Animal science classes have been taught at Michigan State University since the 1850s. The first short course was taught in 1896. A separate department was started in 1910 and called Animal Husbandry. In 1931, a new breeding cattle barn, experimental feeding barn, sheep feeding barn, bull barn, and meat laboratory were completed. In 1939, the livestock pavilion on Shaw Lane was finished. In 1981, the name of the department changed to Animal Science.

Scope and Contents

The MSU Livestock judging team records include information on the various contests, scores, press releases and photographs. The Farmers' Week records include planning records such as room reservations for sessions, exhibitor information, correspondence, and newspaper clippings. The Michigan Sheep Breeders Association records includes financial information, bred ewe sales, Michigan Make It Yourself With Wool contest, and ram truck and ram day sales. The Administrative files contain course information from Harlan Ritchie, records about the departments of sheep and cattle, including Polled Herefords and Angus, and research including hormones for sheep, as well as other department related files. The Northern Beef Demonstration Center records consist of correspondence, meeting minutes, progress reports and Upper Great Lakes Regional Commission records. The subject files include materials about livestock production, a swine project, a test bull project, and lamb pools.

Photographs include sheep, demonstrations on farms, farm scenes, cattle, people, Farmers' Week, MSU Livestock Judging team, MSU beef cattle and the Michigan Sheep Breeders Association ram truck. There are also photographs of flocks entered in the Wolverine Lamb Production Contest and exhibits of the winners.

Electronic Resources include nomination documents for induction into the Sirloin and Saddle Portrait Gallery for Ronald Nelson (1990), Harlan Ritchie (1994), and David Hawkins (2013).
