Historical Note

The Michigan State University Thailand Project was begun in the fall of 1964 to assist Thailand's Ministry of Education and National Education Council in both short and long-range educational planning. Nearly forty MSU faculty members served as advisors and consultants in formulating Thailand's educational policy.

These faculty members worked principally through two Thai government agencies: The National Education Council (NEC) and the Education Planning Office (EPO). The NEC operated as a planning agency working closely with Thai universities and higher education generally. This involved the implementation of programs such as vocational training and seminars, as well as the starting of a data bank which furnished information relating to education to aid the council in reaching appropriate solutions. The EPO provided assistance to education at the secondary level and in the development and promotion of planning in rural areas.

The Institute for International Studies in Education on the MSU campus acted as a coordinator of the project. Its duties included the organization and recruitment of project consultants, the formation of a back-up team to provide base support and to receive various tour groups of Thai educators who were sent to observe educational processes in this country. MSU's involvement in the project ended in August 1968 when Thai officials assumed complete control over the educational programs.

Scope and Contents

Records of the Thailand Project include a large amount of correspondence between alumni, professors, and education officials in Thailand with administrators and members of the "back-up" team at Michigan State University, as well as some from various American and international agencies connected with the project. Records document the development of the three-party contract to begin the project; and preliminary, official University, consultant, and miscellaneous reports document the progress of the project and the individual assessments of short-term professors involved in Thailand. Also included are records of Thai educational organizations, including the National Educational Council, the Educational Planning Office, and the University Development Commission.

Records also detail programs and schedules of visiting groups of Thai educators in the United States and of receptions and visits of MSU educators in Thailand, as well as extensive biographical information on many Americans and Thais involved with the Project. Records detail seven planning and assessment conferences in Thailand; publications of Thai and American participants; information on similar projects conducted by the University of Indiana and Stanford University; preliminary planning; and salary, budget, and account records of the Project.
